

Design Review Sync — March 24th

Present: Jamie, and the design and product folks.

The main agenda item was the checkout flow mockups, which have now been through a couple of rounds of feedback. Reviewers were generally positive about the overall direction, but there were some specific concerns raised about how the flow looks on smaller screens — a few of the form elements appeared cramped, and one reviewer pointed out that the primary action button wasn't clearly visible without scrolling on certain device sizes. The team spent a good chunk of the meeting going through screenshots and discussing options. Jamie will incorporate the latest round of feedback into the checkout flow mockups before the next stakeholder review, focusing specifically on the mobile layout issues that were flagged.

Toward the end, there was a brief look-ahead at the upcoming brand refresh — marketing had shared a rough timeline, and there was some curiosity about how much it might affect existing design work. The team agreed it's too early to plan around it in any real way, so it was left as something to revisit once more details are available, without assigning it to anyone yet.
